

Changing our attitudes to mental illness

Medical Schools Council 1st Student Conference 22nd June 2016

The Medical Schools Council hosted their first student conference, and students from medical schools across the UK attended and discussed current topical issues in medical education.

AntiBASH featured on the agenda, with Leicester medical students, Maddie Daley, Alice Neale, Rosie Abi Aoun and Abina Dharmaratnam giving an engaging and informative talk on why we should ban the bash.

Delegates heard about the innocuous nature of banter between specialties and the comparative costly impact of bashing, affecting patients, students and the future workforce.

The Leicester students' presentation was very well received and not only spread the word against bashing, but also recruited a number of delegates to join the campaign.
