RESEARCH TRAINING FELLOWSHIPS FOR PSYCHIATRISTS

Oxford University is pleased to announce a Training Fellowship programme specifically targeted at psychiatrists, and leading to award of a D.Phil. (=Ph.D.). It is funded by the Wellcome Trust. Three Fellowships are available each year.

Psychiatry trainees at any stage from CT1 to ST6 are welcome to apply, and the scheme is flexible as to your clinical training needs. The main selection criterion is excellence and potential: we are looking for the next generation of academic psychiatrists.

Full details of the programme, potential supervisors & example projects, and how to apply, can be found at:

<http://www.medsci.ox.ac.uk/graduateschool/doctoral-training/programme/biomedical-and-clinical-sciences> and click on the 'Mental and Cognitive Health' tab on the right hand side.

The successful candidates will receive training in a range of methods, and will conduct research leading to the award of a D.Phil. in their chosen area. Fellowships are for three years; funding covers fees, a clinical salary at the appropriate level, and support for research costs. The programme places strong emphasis on translational research. To facilitate this, Fellows will have the opportunity to spend one day-a-week in a clinical unit that specialises in translating research findings into routine care.

The next round of applications will open in September 2015, with a deadline in early January 2016, to commence in Autumn 2016. However, you are invited to contact potential supervisors as soon as possible to discuss and develop a suitable project. You can also contact Professor Paul Harrison (harrisonpa@psych.ox.ac.uk) for advice and further information.
